

WORKERS' COMPENSATION INSURANCE AT A GLANCE

What is Workers' Compensation Insurance?

If you're a business owner, it's easy to assume that accidents won't happen at your workplace. But the statistics say otherwise.

Employers are required by law to take steps to ensure their workplaces are safe. This includes having workers' compensation insurance for all their employees.

Who should consider it?

Workers' compensation insurance is compulsory for all employers in every state and territory in Australia. Each state or territory has its own workers' compensation scheme, run by independent regulators, with rules differing slightly between each jurisdiction.

"Poor work health and safety costs $5,000 per worker each year and equates to 4.1 per cent of Australia's gross domestic product. This doesn't even touch on the immeasurable cost of grief and trauma to workers and their families."

What can it cover?

Workers' compensation insurance pays employees who are injured at work or become sick because of their work. Workers' compensation can provide weekly benefits, medical and hospital expenses, rehabilitation services, certain personal items and a lump sum payment for permanent impairment on the basis set by the particular state or territory scheme.

TYPE OF COVER	POTENTIAL BENEFITS
 Employees' wages	If they're not fit to work
 Employee injury	Cost of their rehabilitation and medication

CASE STUDY

Lin works on a production line, packing food products. After five years at the job, she develops carpal tunnel syndrome, which is painful and makes it impossible for her to do her job.

It was found that the repetitive work on the production line caused her condition. She needs to take time off work to rest, undergo physiotherapy and have corticosteroid medication.

Lin's employer is able to claim on their workers' compensation. They also took steps to improve their work safety practices, such as moving staff to different tasks and ensuring they take regular breaks during the day.
